ILBERT was at feast iwenty-

Islx before he first began to realize that some of the mountain tops toward which he had directed his footsteps were not going to be so accessible as he had dreamed, Gilbert had come from an achieving family. His father, up to the week of his death, had been one of the most important barristers in town. His mother had practiced law in a highly successful way up to the last year of her life. His brother, at thirty, was already a surgeon of more than local Importance. His sister, a college grad wate herself, had married one of the outstanding bio-chemists of the world. So It was by background, environment, example and possibly inher-Itance that Gilbert, even before he was finished with college, should turn lils footsteps resolutely toward acom-

It is true that the subject of law had never particularly interested him. He had not a systematic mind. The conception of ideas interested him more than their execution, and if he had any preference at all, it was for Tying for a large part of the day be fore a good fire, or a sun-kissed meadow, and reading, But a man cannot foster such inelinations if he hopes to get ahead !" this world. Gilbert knew that. Unless you had a marked talent of one sort or another, the safest road to achievement lay along lines of one of the substantial, remunerative professions. Medicine, Law.

With his stender talent for writing, the best he rould probably hope for would be a journalistic or editorial

And so It was that Gilbert turned to law. It was not that he did not bring a fairly average equipment to this work. He had a good mind, even an unusual endowment of Intelligence, and every law office of the city was open to the son of his father.

The secret of his fallure to progress, along about the time he was twentysix, was a subtle yet a fundamental one. I.s heart was not in his work. Intellectually, he wanted to be a successful lawyer. Emotionally, he yearned for the blue days at Capri. where he had been taken as a young boy on his first trip abroad. He yearned for the sweet indolence of that kind of tife, with perhaps a pad and pencil at bis beek and call, so that he could write as a dilettante writes, from impulse rather than ambition or necessity. The instinct to struggle was not in Gubert, and yet, surrounded as bewas by the examples of successful people, he had not the courage to let go. And so for four years after these first realizations began to dawn disquietingly upon him, he struggled alread at a profession that was flavor tess to him. It was impossible to plead a rase with fervor about which you felt so dispassionately. The claims of one set of human beings against another could not, did not, interest him. The cumning, devious, shrewd phraseology of the contract, so fascinating to some types of mind, elicited no real interest from fillbert. The camifications of the law. Its Interpretations and Its practice. proused in him nothing more than a weariness for the rather purposeless struggles of mankled against man-

At thirty, on an impulse he was never thoroughly able to comprehend the amount of courage that went with it--Alibert resigned his position as junior partner in a wellknown law firm, left superficial explanatory notes to a few of the memfiers of his family and his felends. drew out a saving account of some several hundred dollars and took a ship going Mediterranean way.

That was the beginning of fifteen coars of wandering over the houry face of the heary earth. Lingering, when necessary, in one city, in one port, in one village or another, long enough to lay up, by simple manual labor, sufficient money to sustain him for a brief period of the future. Those of his friends who happened to encounter him in their travels, described him sadly as a pale, draggled fellow wandering aimlessly across the face of the carth.

In a way, that was how Gilbert restanded himself. While the new life one far, far preferable to the old. and not a regent lucked in his beart, it the same time there was clear a failthe, an nimblesseen, a section after he knew not what, they hear to come cost to his hole and a crosp was upon his back. Reen the enemy of their money new forces, from to will. The evend era of the disonient was man him. It was not that the officen years following his decision had been unless py ones. On the centeres, they had era rich, fraitful, sickling and oil renturous. The university of the uniresea had been tillierra, figurationly and therally speaking, he had best lean, whetted vists on appethe for ife, for whitems for experience, for are, And yet constinen it account to ellbort, as he colered a new port, as in strained out of another, as special was for one dozen cantagers of preand foreign wines allo against his perved win at $1.

palate, as the sweet, mocking eyes of exotic women beckoned him, as he lived and learned and suffered, that after all he was getting nowhere. And that, for one who has made the kind of momentous decision that Gilbert had fifteen years before, is a disheartening realization. He had sacrificed everything. Weil and good, but only if the sacrifice had been just?

Whither? was the question that began to engrave Itself acidly into the heart and wind and the consciousness of the wanderer. Prosdom and what to do with 11? Lelswee and whose to spend 117 The world his playground and where to play?

He was always coming, he was always going. Maidens smiled at him out of their casements. They had homes. They belonged there. They were rooted to some soil. Everybody, it seemed to allbert, was rooted to some soil and even though the men with whom he came in contact in the cities and along the countrysidesfamily men with responsibilities—ilstened with wistful eyes as Githert recited his adventures, they were secure men, surrounded with the intangible nura of belonging.

It began to dawn upon Gilbert that he belonged nowhere and yet that was not what was bothering him. He would not, had he been able to manipulate backwards the magic time-carpet, have returned to the life he had so debonairly discarded back in his youth days. If certain dissatisfactions, nostalglas were upon him, they were not those of regret.

He was sick with quest. Neither must you think that in all these years Gilbert had been without the pastimes, the amours, the gratifications that have to do with women. He had crossed the paths of many and they had left their memories upon him. Yet, at forty-five, Gilbert, fallure, was still seeking.

It was in Naples, of all places, when Gilbert was forty-eight, that he ran across, in the open market place, a girl named Chita. She was selling temons out of a big beautiful basket and she had driven in that morning with them piled on a donkey cart, from the incomparable bills of Amala. She was beautiful in a brown, Italian way, no stripling of a girl, but with a blown maturity to her. Rich, rather dusky skin and white teeth that Anshed against It.

Gilbert, who spoke many patols of Iralian, drove back in the bills of Amala with her in the donker cart. She lived in a white adobe house with an ancient grandmother and their worldly possessions consisted of sover the home of Mr. and frs, Archie lemon trees, an orange tree, a goat and | Hodgkins Saturday right, 'tay 23. a silk quilt. The idea of fusblumus was largely due to Rolla's rion to Raly in 1875. The sculptor was co-omissioned by M. Turquet, who told Rodin that he wished to have a Tong tor the proposed palace of decorative arts. The "Thinker" is part of Ro-din's "Magnum times." At the salon of 1904 the figure was on exhibition. It was planned to be placed on the upper crossbeam of the gate of hell, where the "Thinker" could look down on the scenes of human passion and? woe extended below him. By public subscription the statue was ultimately purchased and presented to the city of Paris.

He hunched himself over on his shoulder so as partly to conceal from Puddingface what he was doing, and extracted the letters under cover of the bedelothes and began to read them. Two facts became obvious. They were in French, and they were love letters. Harold summoned up his half-forgotten matriculation French and began to read them. He made slow progress, for the handwriting was slovenly and there were numerous words Harold dld not know. From the context, however, It slowly became apparent that they were words unlikely to appear in any dictionary. In fact the letters were love letters of the grossest and most besotted kind imagluable. Harold peered at the signatures. They were complicated, and enmeshed in a web of flourishes. Most of the inter ones were merely words of endearment-just as a man might sign himself "your ownest ducky" If he were fool enough, thought Unrold-but others were definitely signed with a name. That name, Harold decided, after prolonged examination, was Raphael.

Then came the turn of the addresses. The early letters were written on printed paper from some hotels or other in Paris-to Unrold one Paris hotel meant the same as any other Parls hotel-but the others were-"Goodness gracious," said Harold to himself for the second time that mornlik-were addressed from Le Palals du Rol. Muhlbed-Menkhest. Harold plunged into what he know of postwar geography, and managed to grasp fleeting memory by the tall. Yes, Muhlhad-Menghest was the capital of the Danublan kingdom of Lesser Avaria, sometimes known as the kingdom of the Huns and Awars. And-yesgoodness gracious goodness—the present king of the Hung and Avars was Raphael, Raphael Metapodivitch, That explained a good deal, although not everything, of course. It explained why people were willing to risk their revolution and maybe a war or two "We'll be late for dinner if we're not careful," said Puddingface, casually, sticking a leg out of the bedelothes, "Dinner?" said Harold. He boked at his watch, but for the secon? time in three days he had forgotten to

"Past twelve, anyway," said Puddingface, reaching for his trouter. Harold was busy shortes the case I letters down into the bottom of the ed where they might lie bidden witte was dres le :

The precaution proved unuse act. for Puddingface grabbed the main at which stood to him in place of a directing gown and paddled off in the oldepera down to the bathroom. Harold serombled out of imi-goodness, but he was stiff!-and began to put on his clean underseas. Standing in his vest and ponts he took the case to his handa. The strop had broken between two holes, and it was a simple matter to spiles it together with a screw in coff link. Then he put the case over his absolders and put on his shirt. He realized that the letters were precious and ought to be looked after, even although he did not proporly appreciate vet the fact that they were considerably more dangerous to their possessor than twice their weight

As Unrold shaved a gradual feeling of better being came back to him. It certainly was rather good to have some adventures sometimes. It would bo olco to return those letters to the king of the Huns-he would probably receive a royal letter of thanks in exchange, or something equally splendid. Harold had acquired from Greataunt Mailida a proper respect for the Lord's anotated, even if they did write olthy letters to Parision enchantresses.

And Marjorie. Harold became conscious that he was urgently antions to see Marjorle again, although in his unfortunate cowly awakened condition of half an hour ago he had felt lust the opposite. He wanted to see her smile, and to feel again the touch of her little Use on his check. He promptly declared to call at Ambard road immediately after dinner, and the very thought galchened his breath and made a new man of him. He even whistled as, with the price of a throne between the standider blades, he went

Today it wished brea been epolical for Harold by Mrs l'angel's pointed question as to how he was (it has already been medicated that Mrs. Pound looked askance at the abad todgers totause of the distocution of routing they brangld etaut) were it not for the fact that he had far for much to think about already. Mrs. Pound's remarks, barbed questions from Marks and Orietly as to how he enjoyed himself lastenight, threadbare wittleisms from Danvers about black eyes, they all rattled harmlessly off Harold's armor of new things to think about a murder and a royal scandal on one With dinner over, Harold decided to go ut once to Ashford road. He selzed his hat and issued forth.

There were two strangers in Scae Fell avenue as he went along it. He hardly noticed them, but they looked keenly at him as he passed. Both were fairly smartly dressed, and one was obviously English. The other was a foreigner. The two looked at hlm, exchanged a word together, and then the foreigner turned casually back and walked in the same direction on flavold fifty yards behind him, while the other continued to stroll. very slowly, down Scae Fell avenue. Harold's way took him under the rallway bridge (how well be remembered staggering under it last night, half dend!) and out once more across Murley common. Harold looked keenly and with interest for traces of last night's battle. There were not many. On the pavement where the cars had stopped werê two dark marks. na 19 made by drops of blood. Along the footpath where Harold had stood was n dark smear in the dust, which also might have been blood, but the dust was too thick for it to be obvious. No casual inspection would reveal last night's doings to anyone.

The autagonists must have carried of the dead man and made all whipshape as soon almost as Harold lind escaped. Harold felt glad of that; he was not at all anxious to be mixed up in a murder trial, and he cared neither one way nor the other apart from that as to whether justice were dealt out to the slayer, He had taken a chance, just as had the man who was shot, and it was no concern of anyone's, least of all Harold's, to load the dice against him after he had been lucky enough to win the first

Then he came to Ashford road, and quickened his step with a touch of pleasurable unticipation. He knocked at the door and waited, anxiously but happily.

Alas, alas for Harold! Cerberus in the form of Mrs. Tilling opened the door to him, call promptly flew at blm, enapping triple-jawed. Harold qualled and wilted before the violence of this offensive. No, he could not see Marjorle, and if Mrs. Tilling could manage it he would not see her again, either. She was in bed, worn out and with a shocklag cold acquired by tramping over the country with r lout who on ht to have known better, and by rides to motor cars which could only be the accompaniment of the worst kind of she.

The very idea! Ethis was in reply to Harold's timed suggestion that he might be allowed to address a few words to Marjorie, under Mrs. Till-Ing's chaperonage, through the crack of her door.) That showed the sort of man he was, undoubtedly. Harold could clear off and not soll her doorstep sgain. Mrs. Tilling, drunk with power, and with Marjorle in bed, in full command of the situation, slammed the door. Harold remained before it for two seconds standing on one foot, shifted onto the other one for another two seconds, and turned reluciantly away. The world was a dark and unhappy place, all of a

At the corner of Ashford road the foreign genilleinnn was doing up his shoelace, and only ceased the opera-Hon as Harold walked past him on the Common again, but it did not make much impression on him. Truth to tell, he had forgotten that a king's ransom nestled against his spine; his thoughts were too full of a chit of

He made like serrowful way over to the beach on which-goodness praclous, it was only two days ago: it seemed more like two years he had made the memorable promise to escort Marjorle late the country. He est down and devoted a scleon ball, hour to making himself more relierable than ever. He could not see Marjorie. He could not go to the club. He was worried and bothered He did not know what he ought to do next. What should a young man do when he is denied access to his faily love by a termagant of a genr dient. He made up his mind to write to Marbule. He heaved bluvele of file beach and Legan to stride back to Bond Fell View, with his spirits faintle raised by the prospect. And a man in foreign clother at the same time rates. himself from a neighboring bench and proceeded in the same direction.

The first tiling that enught Harold's dingface. Puddingface's bands were tled behind his back. With a heave and a wriggle he rose to his knees on Not every one encounters first love, the bed. His head was lost in a green balze bag (part of Harold's property). which was tied round his neck. Just about where Puddingface's mouth would be a white handkerchief was fastened tightly about his head, giving the effect of a vast mirthless grin extending all the way about Puddingface's green balze head. Puddingface's feet were tied as well as his hands, and after poising balanced on his knees for a few wild seconds he pitched forward onto his nose again (if, indeed, there was a nose within that green baize bag).

By this time Harold began to realize that is was incumbent upon him to release Puddingface from his bonds. He drew out his penkuife and cut the cords which were round his ankles. and untied the handkerchief and the triog of the green balze bag. Puddingface's red and wrathful countenance emerged, as he sat up on the

It was a minute or two before he could speak; during the interval he was, engaged in spitting out shreds of green balze and even when he was able to speak his words were not at first wholly intelligible. "The blank blanky blank blank blankers!" he said. "Who are?" asked Harold.

"Danvers and Marks, of course. I came up here after dinner, and as I valked into the room those two dighters jumped on me and fled me op and put my head in a bag and threw me onto the bed. Then they undld all my clothes and threw me backward and forward and turned me upside down and nearly turned me inside out. They think they're jolly funny, the silly swine. Then they went round the room-I heard them-and threw everything about. Just look at the mess they've made."

They certainly had. Every drawer and cupboard in the room had been emptied and the contents strewn about the room. There was a certain system and order in the disorder which started an idea in Harold's mind, which in turn started a whole series of cold shivers down his spine. "Are you sure it was Danvers and

Marks?" he asked quaveringly. "Of course it was," said Puddingface; "who would it be if it wasn't them? Mrs. Pound and Emmle?" "No," said Harold. That was all he ald, but he thought the more. Why, nothing would be easier than for a couple of evil-intentioned people to enter the house while all Seac Fell View avenue was in the threes of devouring or digesting dinner. And the sort of person who would do this was the sort of person who went round shooting people on Morley common, and who would make no bones at all about tying Puddingface up and investleating his sacred person. Padlingface did not realize that he was lucky not to have had his head clubbed en or a bullet seat through the midlle of the apple ple of which he had just raten too much. Yet Puldingface, ignorant of his luck, indulged at that moment in a further torrent of

"I'll got even with the swine, see If I don't" blared Puldingface, "D'you know if they're in?" "Afraid I don't," said Harold.

"We could go and muck their room up the same as this if they were or," eald Puddingfare: the "we" in thit speech was disturbing to Harold's prace of mind.

"Let's clear this mess up first, for goodness' sake," he said, desperately auxious to postpone the Issue, and Paddingface agreed sulkly,

Of course, it was Harold who cleared up the news. Puddingfore was too busy standing about saying things. Harold took a furtive glance out of the window; sure enough the forelanlooking man was at the corner of the street, talking to his English friend. Moreover, twenty sards nway from then were standing two more foreignlooking men. He feit suddenly sick and ducked hurrledly away from the

"What on earth can I do?" Harold asked himself pitifully, for the twentioth time that week-end. Give the letters back? But how, and to whom? Who was the rightful owner of the hally things, anyway? That writer or the recipient-the king or the lady? And if he tried to give them back wouldn't the other side bear him a grudge which they would do their best to repay? As far as he could see the only thing he could do was to hang on for a little while and find out what wire to be beat. If he burned the things neither side would believe he had done so. Police? That was possible, but Harold shrank from the idea of walking into a police station with this fanisatic story of princes and pistol shots. There would certainly be a dreadful senudal, and the murder on the common would have to be investigated with him as the principal withers, and there would be headlines in papers and photographs and all sorts of uppleasantness. And the bank would of course disapprove very strongly. He might lose his job! That elinehed the matter for Ilarold. He would rather be murderously assaulted than risk dismissal. Then the ter bell rang downstates, and Puddingface made a prompt exit.

Harold followed him only two seconds later. The two seconds were the time It took him to bolt and took the bedroom windows-he was taking no chances. Then he sentiled after Puldinglace. Harold most emphalically dld not want to be alone.

At leating Paddingface, with a tact amazing for him, elicited from Mrs. Pound the information that Mesers. Denvers and Marks had gone out som at or lunch and would not be back till late that night. As Mrs. Pound said Harold and favored him with a wink and a grin. Harold went on shivering all down bie spine. Matters were growing far too complicated. Yet he did not see what he could do when after tea Puddingface grabbed him by the elbow and said in a hourse whisper:

"Come on, now's our chance." Danvers and Marks shared the first floor front, immediately under Marold's room. Puddingface dranged Unrold in and shut the door; and then he exploited into action in a simply astonishing fashion.

"I'll show 'em what ragging is," said Puddingface, with the memory of nn hour with his head in a bug and the rest of him exposed to the elements rankling like polson. Harold helped him unwillingly and ineffectively, and, as was evident from the energy Puddingface displayed, unnecessarily. Puddingface began by emptying all drawers and cupboards, piling the contents in a lieap on the floor, and danging on them. He took the sheets and pillows and blankets from both beds, made them into a bundle, and tied the corners together with at least fifteen knots. He took razors and combs and brushes and bld them all round the room-on top of cupboards and up the chimney and in vases. He took down all the pictures and placed them between the muttresses and the springs of the beds. He squeezed toothpaste into slippers and shaving cream into pajama pockets. Finally he tied a long string in succession to every china article in the room, each of which he poised precariously on corners and shelves, and he made the end of the string fast to the leg of a bed so that the bight hung a foot from the floor across the door in such a fashion that a hasty step into the room would bring down every article in turn with a crash.

"Plat'll do now," whispered Puddingface. "That ought to show 'em." It certainly would, decided Harold, appalled! "What are you going to do now?" he asked anxiously.

"Me7 I'm goin' out for a bit. Goin' to see what girls there are on Morley

"Going out?" repeated Harold helplessly. That meant that if he stayed In he would be alone in the house, save for Mrs. Pound. He could not possibly bear that. Out in the streets, or on the crowded common, he would be safe. So would he be at the club. The club? No. Herald decided he did not want to go to the club.

"Shall I come with you?" asked Harold.

How Soil Is "Limed" The term "liming" as generally used means the application to the soil of the element known to chemisty as calclum in one of two forms-cither calclum carbonate, more commonly known as carbonate of lime, or calcium oxide, the ordinary burned fime of com merce. Carbounte of magnesium mixed with carbonate of lime, as in dolomitie or magnesian limestone, and the mixed oxides resulting from burning such limestones are included also under the

Japan and China Were Giv en Ornate Nicknames

In the year 671 A. D. the Chines. gave the name Jinpen to the archi pelugo situated east of their empire The first syllable of this name is rep resented by a character meaning sug or light; the last syllable by a character menning origin, or root. The word is thus translated as "origin of the sun." Japan being east of China, it is easy to understand how the name "Land of the Rising Sun" became applicable to this country, The Japanese, who borrowed their writing and many of their terms from China, adopted this name also, but modified its prontuciation to Nihon Another form is Nippod; or Dal Nip

China is known as the Flowery king iom. This is a translation of the Chinese Hun Kuo, and is the most an clent name of China. It is not known whether it originally referred to flow ers in the literal sense, but probabbly dld not. Hun means flowery, elegant, or distinguished. It is supposed that the ancient Chinese so designated their country because they regarded their people as the most polished and civilized in the world. This term may have been employed at one time in the iense of "country full of flowers." According to one theory, the Chinese riginally fived in a very harren re tion of Central' Asia, and they railed thel new country the "Flowery Kingdom" in contrast to their old frome in the desert.

Why Korea Breame "Chosen"

"Koren" was the name given to the country in northeastern Asia by foreigners, particularly Europeans. The Koreans themselves as well as other Orientals preferred to call the country "Chosyon," because that was the old native name. "Chosyon," usually written "Chosen" in English, is from Chinese "Ch'uo Hsien." It was notura: that the Japanese, after they took possession of the kingdom of Korea. should have preferred to call it Chosen.-Pathfinder Magazine.
